LIVER DISEASE

There are many different diseases of the liver. Perhaps the most commonly known are the hepatitis conditions, there are several different diseases that cause inflammation of the liver and these are collectively known as hepatitis.

Cirrhosis of the liver is the formation of fibrous tissue caused by the death of liver cells. This damage may be caused by alcohol, hepatitis infections or more rare conditions like primary biliary cirrhosis which is progressive damage caused to the bile ducts which causes bile to build up in the liver which in time causes damage.

There are cancers of the liver, some are primary and some are secondary. Hepatocellular carcinoma is a primary cancer of the liver that is usually associated with some other form of damage to the liver.

Many diseases of the liver are accompanied by jaundice.

PSC SUPPORT UK

Primary Sclerosing Cholangitis (PSC) is an uncommon chronic liver disease where the bile ducts inside and outside the liver progressively narrow due to inflammation and scarring.

Bile ducts are tubes which carry bile (a greenish yellow liquid made by the liver) into the upper part of the bowel, in order to break up the fat from the food that we eat. The narrowing causes bile to accumulate in the liver, and can result in damage to the liver cells. There is currently no evidence that the disease may be inherited. PSC may occur alone, but in 70% of cases there is associated bowel disease, particularly Colitis and/or Crohn's Disease
